

Devin Castillo - Assignment 1: Project Proposal

1. Which type of ideas do you think apply to Shyp? Why?

I think that the ideas that apply to Shyp are to simplify and mission almost impossible. Shyp makes it very simple for a user to ship something to someone else, making Shyp take on the load instead of the user. I also think mission almost impossible applies to Shyp because when you think of this idea it seems pretty far fetched because of how much the company has to do on their side of each shipment.

2. Which type of ideas do you think apply to Curofy? Why?

The best ideas that apply to Curofy are me too and remix. Curofy joins the industry social app market just like other apps like LinkedIn. It also remixes this idea by combining the medical world and the idea behind LinkedIn.

3. Use Product Hunt to find a relatively new startup and respond to the following about it:

- Describe the idea.

The name of the startup is Captain Killswitch. The idea behind it is to have a quiet menu bar to close every running app you have on your computer.

- Describe the type(s) of ideas that apply to it.

The idea that applies to it is that if you are somebody that often has a lot of tabs and just random applications running that are eating your memory and slowing down your computer, then you can run this app to clear everything and give yourself a clean slate.

- Is the idea a painkiller or a vitamin? That is, does the idea address users' needs or emotions? Why?

This idea is definitely a vitamin. It gives the user an easy quick fix of just closing out of everything at any moment they need to.

- Is the idea easy to monetize?

I'd say this would be pretty hard to monetize, the app runs locally on your machine and is designed to be quiet and only there when you need it. Because of this you won't be able to put any ads. There is also not much room for a premium tier or something like that since the idea is very simple.

- Is the idea simple and easy to describe?

Yes the idea is very simple and easy to describe to anyone since there is not much to the app, it's just a button.

- Is the idea personally relevant? Are you or is someone close to you connected to the idea or the related problem?

Yes, it is personally relevant and I know of a lot of people who should use something like this because they always have so many tabs and applications running.

- Does the idea have a large market?

I do not think that this idea would have a large market because it is just supposed to serve as a quick and simple solution to something annoying.

- Does the idea have a legitimate secret sauce?

Looking at this idea, I can't really think of any secret sauce that this app would have that could likely set themselves apart from other apps like it.

A. Brainstorming

Answer the following questions in your document:

1. Brainstorm ideas of problems you want to solve with software like an app or website. Include all the problems you came up with in your document.

- Learning gap and sticking to calorie tracking
- Young adults not having good financial support/decision making
- Newcomer anxiety at the gym

2. Brainstorm ways to solve the problems. Include all the solutions you came up with in your document.

- A food delivery service that isn't expensive but helps people with meal prep
- An online library that isn't intimidating for people to learn about good financial choices.
- A platform where users can find and connect with personal trainers and meet with them all on the same platform.

3. Choose one of your ideas as your product that you will turn into a website for this course. Why did you pick this idea over the other candidates?

I am choosing the online platform for personal trainers. I am choosing this one because I am really passionate about the gym and I believe it should be easier, and less expensive for people looking for personal trainers. I also believe there is an excess of people who scam and take advantage of people's lack of knowledge when it comes to the gym.

4. Is your idea a new one or has it existed before?

I do not believe this has existed before, but I am combining two ideas together. I am taking something that already exists that is called BetterHelp. BetterHelp helps people find online therapists that are rated and have reviews. Users can also meet with them on the app. I am taking that idea and combining it with personal training.

5. What industry would your idea be useful in? Why? (i.e., advertising, apparel, arts, automotive, cosmetics, education, entertainment, food, etc.)

This would be the most useful in the fitness industry, since it is mainly targeted for people who go to the gym or looking to start going.

B. Product Proposal

Answer the following questions in your document:

1. Describe the product you have come up with and the type(s) of ideas that apply to it.

My product is an online platform that helps people find and connect with personal trainers. Users can find trainers based on their goals, experience, budget, and training preferences and meet with them online.

2. How is your product personally relevant to you? Are you or is someone close to you connected to the idea or the related problem?

This product is personally relevant to me because I am passionate about fitness and spend a lot of time in the gym. I understand how intimidating it can be for beginners to find reliable information and know who they can trust.

3. What problem will your product solve?

The product will make it easier to find qualified and trustworthy personal trainers. It will help users avoid misleading information and trainers who take advantage of inexperienced people.

4. What type of website will your product be? (i.e., blog, business, brochure, etc.)

My product would be a mix of a business/service marketplace website that connects users with personal trainers.

5. Is your product a painkiller or a vitamin? That is, does it address users' needs or emotions? Why?

My product is a painkiller because it solves the problem of finding a trustworthy trainer. It can also make beginners feel more comfortable and confident starting their fitness journey.

6. Is your product easy to monetize?

Yes, the platform is easy to monetize. One way is by taking a percentage of each training session/meeting booked through the website. Trainers could also pay for premium features or increased exposure, sort of like how on X you can pay for more impressions.

7. Is your product simple and easy to describe?

Yes, my product can be described just as BetterHelp for personal trainers. Where people can find, chat with, and meet their trainer online.

8. Who will be the likely users of your product? Does your product have a large market?

The main users can be broad because it can be for new people who are getting into the gym, but also for people already going to the gym that are looking for that next level. There is also a large market because many people are interested in improving their fitness.

9. Does your product have a legitimate secret sauce?

My product's legitimate secret sauce would be the trainer matching system. Most personal trainers just use social media to get themselves out there. While people looking for personal training have to look them up across multiple apps, not just one app where both sides go to. This system makes it easier for both trainers and gym goers.
